

It shows the IP Configuration window of PC1. The DHCP option is selected, allowing the PC to obtain its IP address automatically from the DHCP server. The status indicates that the PC is requesting an IP address, showing the beginning of the DHCP address-assignment process.

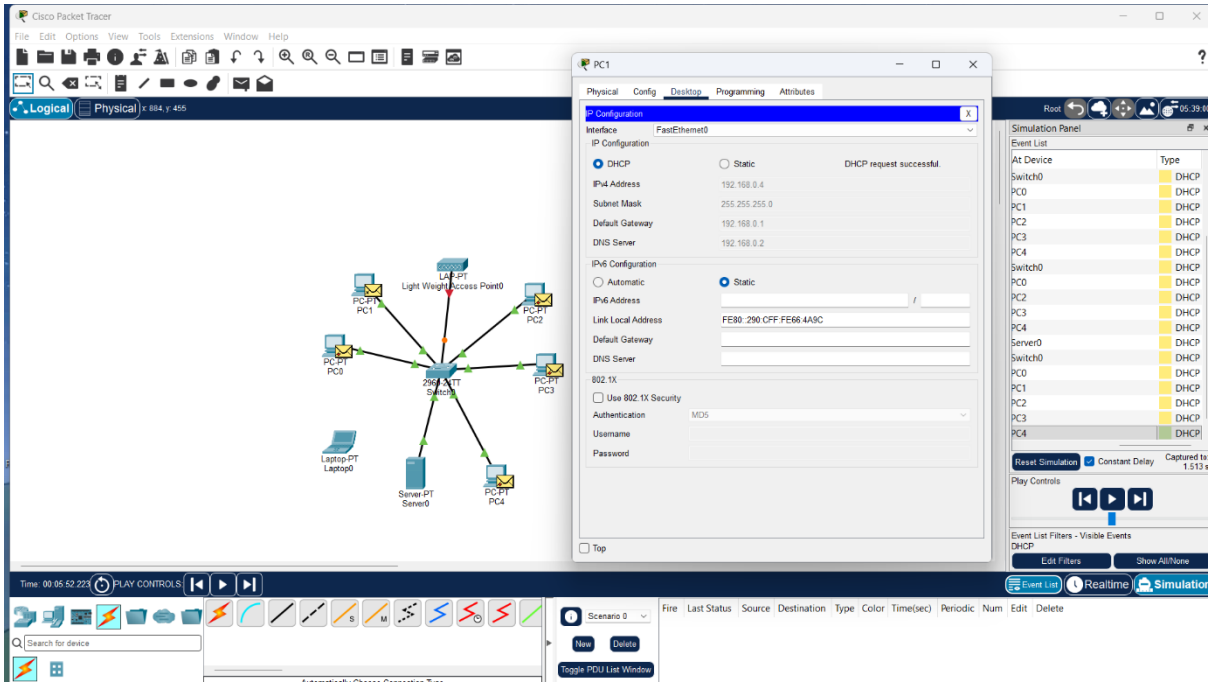

It displays the PDU Information window for PC1. It shows DHCP packet details through the OSI Model and outbound PDU information. This illustrates the DHCP request being prepared and sent from the client into the network.

It screenshot shows the PDU Information window at Server0. The packet details illustrate the server-side processing of the DHCP exchange. The DHCP server receives the client's request and participates in providing network configuration.

It displays the PDU Information window at PC1, showing packet details on the client side of the DHCP exchange. It helps illustrate communication between the client and DHCP server during automatic IP address assignment.

It shows the IP Configuration window of PC1 after the DHCP process. The status “DHCP request successful” confirms that the client has successfully obtained its IP configuration through DHCP.